

Trans-Allegheny Narrow-Gauge.

A few plain observations on the narrow gauge and the proposed Trans-Allegheny road may be acceptable to our friends. They are certainly appropriate in the present condition.

The narrow-gauge road-of, say three feet-it has been proved is capable of conveying the freight of any railroad of the day. In its construction there is a saving of from fifty to sixty per cent. in comparison with the wide gauge. In operating there is an immense comparative saving by the narrow gauge. An average car on the narrow gauge, when loaded with five and a half tons of freight, is no heavier than an empty car on the broad-gauge road. It costs no more to carry a car with five and a half tons of freight on the narrow gauge than it does to carry an empty car on the broad or standard 4.84 gauge. The rails wear so rapidly on the broad gauge from heavy engines and trains that they must on the average be renewed every seven years. On the narrow gauge they last so long that the fact of the length of their durability is not yet settled. The trains on the narrow gauge are as expeditious and as safe as those on the broad gauge.

Above all, the cost of the two classes of roads is the great point.

People may have money to build the narrow-gauge road who may not have enough to build a broad-gauge road. Shall they go without a railroad because they can't build a broad-gauge one? All the facts we have before us point the idea as absurd.

And now comes the scheme to build a narrow-gauge road through a country we once traded with, but whose trade we have by well-known causes lost. The question is, Shall it be built?

First, The road must be located upon a line with a direct road to Lynchburg within seventeen miles of that city. Richmond has decided that we must have that direct road, and this Trans-Allegheny road would carry us very nearly to it. It continues thence through a productive region of Virginia to the county of Pulaski, where it crosses the Atlantic, Mississippi and Ohio and enters the storehouse of mineral wealth which lies west of that road and which has been developed.

The minority of the committee of citizens appointed to consider the subject oppose the road on the ground that the freight it would carry should be thrown upon "existing railroads." We know none other in this case than the Atlantic, Mississippi and Ohio. Does the committee propose that Richmond shall build lateral lines to that road? Then, why their objection? But the committee forget that the proposed road traverses a good country, from Pulaski to Campbell, which contributes little or nothing to the Atlantic, Mississippi and Ohio. How would they dispose of that? We once had its trade-we have lost it. Are we content to lose it forever?

But this policy of contributing freight to "existing railroads"-what does it amount to? The idea is that of one of the committee. We heard him in public meeting say that he would oppose any more trunk railroads to Richmond. That would force us to obtain all commerce from new districts through the present roads by building lateral lines to them. We should have to build lateral lines from Franklin, Henry, Patrick and parts of Bedford and Campbell, to the Lynchburg and Danville road. Where would the freight put upon that road go? Is it not a Baltimore road? Then we should have to build lateral lines to the Atlantic, Mississippi, and Ohio, and put freight upon that. Does that mean to Richmond? Are railroad companies anxious to get rid of freights before they reach their termini? The committee speak of extorting from companies the rights due to Richmond. Can the order of the Court of Appeals compel the current of James river to run upwards? When it can do that it can exert a resistless power over the management of railroads, and, indeed, over the very laws of trade. Freight on railroads flows as steadily upon them as does floating timber along the rivers whose waters bear them. Extraordinary circumstances alone can change the natural law. So that when we contribute freights to "existing roads" that do not run to this city we submit them to a destiny uncertain at best, and the chances of their getting to Richmond are not equal to that of their going elsewhere.

The idea that we are to have no more roads coming into Richmond is indeed nothing less than the idea that we must stop where we are and hope for nothing. No new country, we may be assured, will become tributary to our commerce.

We had thought practical and enterprising men desired to see Richmond a sort of hub with railways-like spokes of a wheel-concentrating upon her. There cannot be too many of them, according to our theory. If Richmond says we must not have any more of them it must be so. But it would be a strange judgment for a town with extraordinary natural advantages, and which only needs that her people be enterprising and liberal-up to the spirit of these times-to make her the greatest inland city in the Union.

Of the proposed Allegheny narrow-gauge we can only repeat what we have said. It should be aided with extreme caution. No thing should be done in which this city is not secure. But secure, we do not see any good reason for hesitation. In doing anything we are safe. We have control of the amount of aid and the terms.

But we do say that if we were offered such a road running from the Kentucky line to Richmond-one gauge all the way-and that that gauge would hold to its freight-this city would be the most foolish city in the world if she refused to pay a liberal sum for it. We could not have it, however, we suppose, in that way; but we could get control of it by the use of our credit in helping it on.

We cannot sit still. We must do something. We are surrounded by hostile agencies. The foundations are being washed away, and the prospects are dotted with peril. What is needed is that our people should look things seriously in the face and make up their minds to something like heroic enterprise, or to be content to linger in feeble hope, and so languish.

The Third Term-A Revelation.

The Utica (New York) Observer recently charged that Judge EDWARDS PIERCE had expressed himself in favor of a third term. That gentleman soon after denied the statement; whereupon the Observer writes up his authorities. One of them looks a communication on the subject to the Observer, in which occurs the following:

"Mr. Pierpont stated (and I inferred from a connection that the President shared the view that the giving of immediate suffrage to the ignorant and uneducated population of the South was the gravest mistake of the Reconstruction era, and that it could not be rectified by any other means than the gradual process of civilization, and that it was the duty of the South to resist it by every means short of civil war. He also stated that the South would not be content to be a second-class citizen of the Union, and that it would not be content to be a second-class citizen of the world."

If the truth were known, we have not a doubt that the sentiments here expressed are those of the great majority of leading Republicans. As to Judge PIERCE's idea of a third term, whatever it may have been, the present aspect of things is not favorable to the retention of the President. We anticipate that others will imitate the Judge's example. "Unloading" will probably become the order of the day.

The Next Congress.

The House of Representatives consists of 292 members. Of these, in the present House 194 are Republicans, 93 are Democrats, 5 are Liberals, and 1 of unknown politics. So the Administration Republicans have a majority of 101 over the Democrats, and of 93 over all parties other than their own.

So far as heard from, 168 members have been elected to the next House of Representatives. Of these, 62 are Republicans and 56 Democrats, according to the latest reports. The same States send to the present Congress 76 Republicans and 32 Democrats. If the Democrats gain in the same ratio in the States which are yet to elect, they will have 150 members in the next House-a majority of 13 over the Republicans and of 8 over both Liberals and Republicans, or, if the Liberals vote with them, of 18 over the Administration Republicans.

Which of the Two to Choose?

The following striking paragraph appears in an elaborate article in the New York Herald of Thursday:

"If the Democrats should carry New York and make gains in Pennsylvania General Grant himself will see that the Republican party is no longer strong enough to secure a second term. We expect, therefore, that he will not only see that the Republican party is no longer strong enough to secure a second term, but that he will see that the Republican party is no longer strong enough to secure a second term."

This is the point. Governor KEMPER spoke the exact truth when he said in substance that the "third term" would be preferable to worse things. Aye, preferable to such a condition of things as the Herald hints at. But all the world to nothing would we prefer that change in the politics of the country which would bring back equality to the States, the revival of their municipal authority, and the restoration of honest government. Give us these great and good things, with that peace of mind which comes from fair dealing, the rule of the wise, and the triumph of the fittest, and we shall be happy. On the other hand, if we are to be beset by robbers and bandits, and our property is to be seized by strangers and our rights are to be trampled upon, we shall be wretched and miserable, and we shall be a laughing-stock to the world.

It has been the statement of this disposition of the southern people-the impression that it has made upon the northern communities-which has more than anything else brought them to serious reflection upon the state of the nation. The "third term" has done most of good service.

Most sincerely, as a southern man, I pray for a "third term," and "imperialism" itself, rather than submit for an indefinite period to the domination of that unscrupulous Republican party led by Morton and his associates. They are all aspirants to the presidency, and their hope of success is in keeping up sectional bias by bounding on the wretches who worry and oppress the South. The third term and fourth and fifth terms would squelch their aspirations and give us rest from the schemes they concoct for their own elevation through our humiliation, ruin, and misery.

The alternative of a real restoration to freedom and good and impartial administration would be to the South what the bright and sunny haven is to the weary mariner after drifting long over the stormy sea in misery and despair.

If the country is ready for the "third term," let it come. We should know it. If it is not yet time, let us know that. The discussion has done a world of good. It presented to the people the fearful leap before them. If they are not ready to take it let them draw back to safety, peace, and concord.

The Southern Planter.

By an arrangement made by the Executive Committee of the Order of Patrons of Husbandry of Virginia with the proprietor of the Southern Planter (L. R. DICKINSON), FRANK G. RUFFIN has, by invitation of the Order, become the editor of the paper. It is not to be the organ of any special views of the Executive Committee of the Order, but it is to be devoted to the interests of the class of farmers. Mr. Ruffin is one of the most learned agriculturists in the country, and is a concise and lucid writer, we should say-as every body knows. He is remarkable for his powers of observation, and no man is more active and urgent in advancing the measures he deems advantageous to those whose interests he has in charge. The farmers have an able and earnest advocate in him.

The New York Republic (ultra Radical) frankly confesses: "With the exceptions of Iowa and Nebraska, the Republicans were badly defeated in the West yesterday. There is no use in denying the ugly fact, and not much satisfaction in attempting to 'account for it.'"

The New York Tribune says that the election results in the Northwest have made TILDEY, the Democratic candidate for Governor of the Empire State, "ten thousand votes stronger" than he was before, and that "politicians may as well take the fact in all their future calculations."

Exactly true.

Rev. Henry Ward Beecher has filed an affidavit of merit in the Tilton suit.
